Some Notes on Format and Content:

This document contains 5 categories of achievements that you can use to quickly create documents to market yourself. There is a difference in a bio/profile and a resume. In my opinion a resume would include as much information as possible (2-3 pages). A bio would be a short (preferably one page) document that a coach can pack away and/or quickly refer to.

I recommend that you attempt to create both. WHY:

- Usage will vary and depend upon the coach.
- Most coaches will require that you fill out an online profile anyway. It will be easier if you can just copy and paste your resume in there. You may have to do it 8 or 10 times.
- If doing introductory emails or posting on websites a shorter version may be better.
- Someone is more likely to print a one-pager than a 3 or 4 page document – it's just a matter of human nature.
- Having a handout at a tournament – you may find the bio better. Easier to create and package.
- You may not have significant achievements in certain categories and may find you can only populate a one-pager.
- There is no requirement to have all the categories – so focus on what will 'impress'. If you don't really have any significant Community Service then don't include that category – don't try and fake it. For example, JD had significant soccer accomplishments and focused more on that.
